Dr. phil. Jan-Hendrik Passoth

Cultures of Calculation.

Software, Data and Algorithms in Contemporary Society

Jan-H. Passoth is visiting professor of sociology of technology and head of the Digital/Media/Lab at the Munich Center for Technology in Society (MCTS) at TUM, a group of doctoral and post-doctoral researchers studying digital transformations in ethnographic cases studies on industrial production, borders and migration or public broadcasting. He studied sociology, computer science and political science at Hamburg University where he also completed his dissertation on „Technology and Society“ in Sociology (2007).

He has worked in Hamburg, Bielefeld and Berlin and has been a visiting scholar at Indiana University, Pennsylvania State University and a fellow at ZIF in Bielefeld and the Locating Media Group at the University of Siegen. His research draws on insights from science and technology studies (STS) and focusses on the use of standardized and interconnected software technologies in popular culture, politics and the media and the changing role of computer science for contemporary societies.
